The search for a place to photograph is often a time consuming fruitless exercise. Once you find the place to photograph, there is the problem of what to photograph. If you can get that far, then you must worry about the light and how it falls on the subject matter.

Then, there are times when the place is right across the street, someone has placed wonderful things to photograph in imaginative arrangements and the light is beautiful.

You just walk up to that place and decide what goes in the frame.

I love photography when that happens.
