A Gift of Light

It is early morning on the last day of vacation. Most everyone is still asleep while I'm sitting on the porch drinking a cup of tea, listening to the birds singing and feeling a gentle ocean breeze. It will be hot later today, but right now I enjoy a quiet spring morning. I'm thinking of the drive back home and other domestic details on the other end of the trip. Photography is the farthest thing from my mind until I looked up from my chair and observed the scene before me.

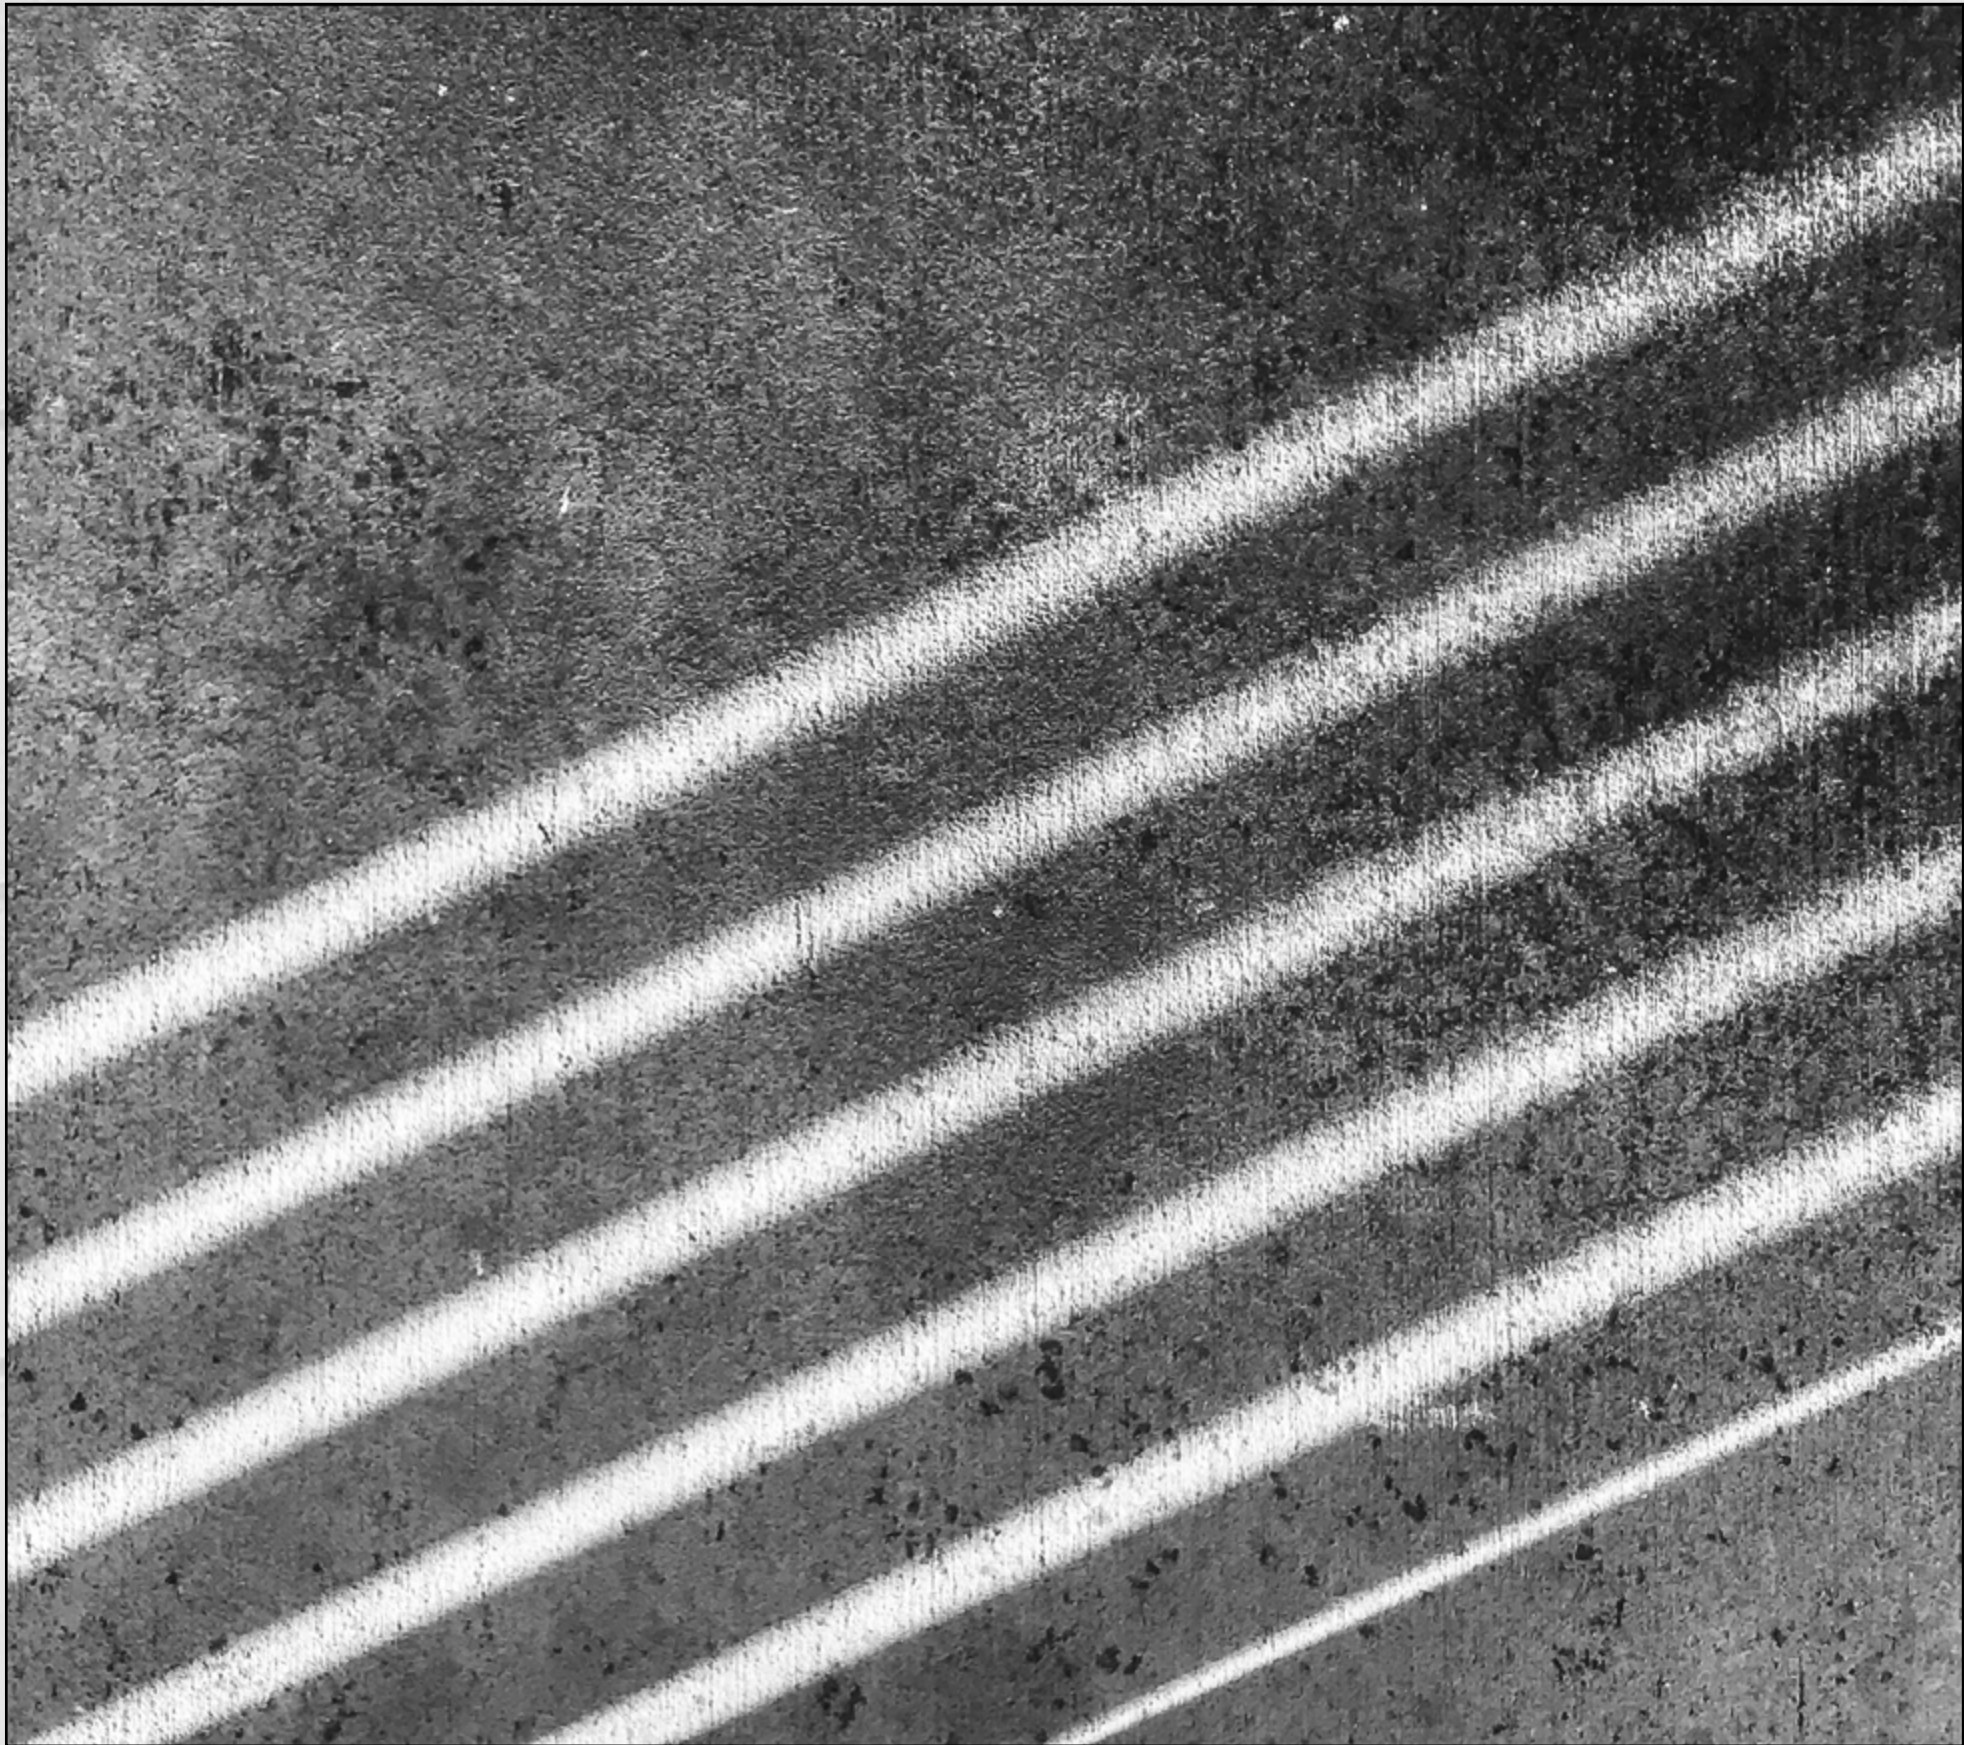

I went back inside and emerged with my smart phone. "Real Camera" or not, when the photo gods deliver such beautiful light to your feet it is your duty and responsibility as a photographer to do something with this gift. It would be considered a grave offense to not accept such a beautiful gift.
